to conduct an investigation into potential excess cancer deaths associated with exposure to ethylene oxide in a nearby sterilization facility. ATSDR is also expanding state environmental health capacity by developing geospatial tools and other resources that states can use to address hazardous exposures.

ATSDR also provides vital support to advance children's environmental health. The agency provides environmental health education to public health professionals, clinicians, community members and others. ATSDR also supports ten Pediatric Environmental Health Specialty Units that advise parents and pediatric health providers on protecting and caring for children potentially exposed to harmful chemicals. In addition to the thousands of trainings conducted, PEHSUs have provided over 1,000 consultations benefitting nearly 2,500 health professionals, parents, and community members. PEHSUs provide a vital role because most healthcare professionals do not receive proper training to recognize, manage, treat, and prevent environmentally related conditions in children.

We urge you to support a request for $100 million for ATSDR in FY 2023. This would significantly enhance the agency's ability to respond to community requests for assistance, fund state and local health departments and protect the nation's health.
